Okefenokee

We used to volunteer at the swamp
you and me both & Charlie fixing boats, killing spiders, keeping it clean.
Yankees came to see the gators.
I mostly came to see you.

We burn here on purpose, like growth is a disease turn dead things to ash, like it's medicine.
Then Bugaboo* happened, then Honeyprairie*
And now the water's clogged by ash & dead fish & the smell is acid & bitter & tasting flakey like old bones-wet like his funeral.

I was never scared of the gators like Charlie was.
I don't like the snakes, personally.

We rebuilt the boardwalk that summer, crushing pitcher plants underfoot

Tramping through coons & rats & bears & turtles & panthers & birds

and tiny moss flowers just starting to bloom.

I never understood how you could drown in water only 4 feet deep.

Maybe it was the hurricane; maybe a gator held him down in the mud & the peat

But he was dead nonetheless.

I found Charlie floating calm like Ophelia-
His eyes full of rainwater.

Now it's just you & me and the bobcats

The time moves slower here, like faith

And a slowly dying sunset

Lazy summer thunder over a swamp.
